The Pacific Bailroad.

We cherish an ardent, and unwavering faith in the feasibility as well as importance of a Direct Railroad to the Pacific-a faith not only that it will be built sometime, and prove blessing to mankind, but that it ought to be built forthwith, and would prove a profitable investment from the start. In other words we believe the property that would be created by the construction of this road—the value that would be given by it to lands, mines, timwould be so much clear gain. And while we would not like to see so vast a work undertaken or managed by any Governmenment, we decidedly favor the granting of effective aid by our Federal Government to any responsible and capable association which will undertake the work. In our judgment the Government ought in five years, and to spend One Million of its own paid-up capital as preliminary to requir-Our Blacksmiths, Merchants, and others, des ing a Million of the Government, and so on to ring to purchase Pigs, Bar, and other Irons, of the end. Then we think the Government within ten miles of its route, have them fairly appraised and opened to entry by settlers only in quarter-sections or less, and give, or rather may the Railroad Company all the value which it had conferred on these lands, counting their service, for conveying a daily mail each way from the Mississippi to the Pacific. By such proffers, we believe our solid capitalists could be induced to undertake the work, and that men of moderate means would invest their hundreds and thousands as stockholders; confident of a fair return for their money. With energy and liberality, the work may be pushed more to to the growth and greatness of our country, to her industrial development and He. Slow sales. Our Gubernatorial Candidate. In all-our political experience we have never known a Whig Gubernatorial nomination to give such general satisfaction to all parties as that of James Pollock. His private and public life has been so catirely unexceptionable that even his most bitter, political opponents can find nothing to say against him_their lips are hermetically scaled. Indeed we challenge them to point to a single act, vote or speech of Judge Pollock's which the people cannot heartily endorse. From his first election to Congress up to the present time, his genius has adorned every station which he has been called upon to fill. As a representative in Congress, although one of the youngest if notthe youngest member, he won for himself a proud position among the highest intellects and ablest debators in that body, by the zeal, ability and eloquence with which he advocated and defended the interests of his native State. Subsequently, when elected to the Bench he won additional laurels to those which already encircled his brow. On all questions of publie policy Mr. Pollock does not hesitate to make an open, bonest and caudid avowal of his sentiments, and he is generally found to be on the right side of every question. In this respect he differs materially from Gov. Bigler, ho is timid, hesitating, and so exceedingly non-committal as to render his position on all questions doubtful. Mr. Pollock, instead of eing a mere tool in the hands of a few designng demagogues, would be governor himself and by his manly independence, firmness, and decision of character, command the confidence of his friends and the respect of his enemies. In shorthe would make just such a Cheif Magistrate as the people of the old Keystone could look up to and honor without compromising their dignity as freemen; and from present indications he will be elected by an overwhelming majority. The honest masses are disgusted with Bigler's imbecility, and base subserviency to the South, and long to see a full grown man in the Gubernatorial chair of the old Keystone-a man of sufficient intellectual capacity to manage the affairs of State creditably and 'successfully, snd with firmness and independence enough to carry out what he honestly believes to be right. Such a man is James Pollock and he will be the next Governor of Pennsylvania .- Telegraph.

But if it don't, and clouds be rife, He'll take your picture to the life. Those little Samas, y clept bahes, Should never come 'midst clouds and shapes But when the monarch of the skies, His shining robes puts on, arise And bring your little ones to me And brightest pictures you shall see. Another theme the muse suggests,
To put all gloomy doubts to rest. Such honest men as scruples feel. Lest wicked craft fresh from the deel Should be invoked in place of art, And made to act a wily part, Are told with conscience clear of evil We have no dealings with the DEVIL.
